

CSU presidents will get a 30-percent pay hike

by Caroline Paras
Staff Writer

Cal Poly President Warren Baker, along with the other 18 California State University presidents, will be receiving a 30-percent hike in salary and executive expense allowance.

Under a plan approved by the CSU trustees Saturday, university presidents will receive a pay increase from $70,260 to $81,576 — a 16.1 percent increase — per year. In addition, presidents will receive an increase in living allowances, and support for automobiles and entertainment will be provided. These extras bring the raise to 25 to 30 percent.

Baker, who is attending an annual conference of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, was not available for comment on the raise Monday afternoon.

CSU Press Officer David Brooks said Monday afternoon that Baker will receive the increase in pay, but is not listed under those presidents who will be receiving executive allowances.

Brooks speculated the reason could be because Baker's home, which is located on the university grounds, is provided by the state.

Monies for the increase will come from reserve resources from the individual campuses. The increase becomes effective Jan. 1.

The salary increases are part of a new management plan that will allow campus presidents to have greater flexibility in evaluating other campus administrators and would eliminate automatic pay increases and job guarantees for campus management, according to Caesar J. Naples, vice-chancellor for faculty and staff relations.

It is this part of the plan which the Statewide Academic Senate opposes, John Bedell, Statewide Academic Senate representative, said Monday afternoon.

Bedell said the plan does not guarantee student or instructor input on management positions. He added the senate did not take a position in the salary increases.

Cal Poly professor Joseph Weatherby said Monday afternoon the procedure in which the plan was approved did not follow normal agenda procedures.

He said usually agenda items similar to the plan are given first and second readings before being approved, but this time trustees decided to go ahead and approve the matter without giving extra time to study the issues.

Weatherby, who represented Cal Poly's Academic Senate at the meeting, added that instructors at Cal Poly have not received a raise in the last two years, but are scheduled to receive a raise Jan. 1.

Fuel loaded; Diablo ready for testing to begin

Mustang Daily—Caroline Paras

Cold water systems testing will begin soon at Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant (above); fuel loading at the plant was completed Sunday.

by Caroline Paras
Staff Writer

Fuel loading at Pacific Gas and Electric's Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant has been completed.

PG&E Spokeswoman Sue Brown said Monday afternoon the work was completed at 11:07 p.m. Sunday. Plant officials are now scheduled to begin step two — cold-system water testing — of a three-step phase to make the plant operational.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission granted PG&E a license to load fuel in one of the plant's two reactors Nov. 8. The commission also granted PG&E permission to start cold-water system testing as soon as loading was completed.

But a stay, ordered Nov. 11 by the District of Columbia Federal Circuit Court of Appeals, temporarily blocked loading at the plant site. That stay was lifted Nov. 15, and PG&E officials began loading fuel at 3:46 p.m. that afternoon.

Plant officials had speculated it would take 10 to 14 days to load 193 fuel components into the loading area. Sunday's completion places the company about five days ahead of that schedule.

Brown said the cold-water systems test should take six weeks to complete. She said during that time the fuel will not be activated — cold water will run through pipes, testing the reactors' safety system.

After the test is completed, PG&E will go back to the NRC to request a low-power testing license, Brown said.

Disenrollment may end quarter for unwary students

by Brenda Bieleke
Special to the Daily

The quarter is nearing an end. A student attends classes, passes tests and feels he is doing well this quarter, for a change. Leafing through his mail one day, he finds a letter from the Records Office at Cal Poly, warning him of disenrollment from the quarter in progress unless he clears the debt he owes for unreturned equipment within five days.

According to Cal Poly Registrar Gerald N. Punches, disenrollment comes from two sources and is generally the result of a lack of communication.

Problems with registration fee payment and holds constitute the two ways students can find themselves facing disenrollment, said Punches. When a registration check that is incorrectly or incompletely filled out is received, the Cashiers Office will notify the student.

Lee Diaz of the Cashiers Office explained the procedure. "I give them one shot to take care of the problem at the time CAR forms are submitted. If the students don't take care of it then, they must go through late registration. If the problem is still not taken care of, it goes to Accounts Receivable."

Accounts Receivable receives about 10 to 12 bounced checks each quarter, said Punches. A student is then notified and told to come in and clear up the problem. If the student does not make good the check, Punches notifies Accounts Receivable that the student is disenrolled.

"They then contact the State Treasury, which receives the fee payments, to clear the students and the University's payment obligation," the registrar said. The student is disenrolled for the quarter.

A student can also be disenrolled for failing to clear a hold, which appears on CAR forms and study lists. A hold is placed on a student's record for failing to return or pay for items checked out from any of 21 different offices on campus.

The registrar said that 500-600 holds are placed on study lists each quarter. Students have one week into the quarter to settle the matter or face disenrollment. "After the first week of classes we generally have 20 to 30 students who have not cleared their holds," said Punches.

Punches contended that quite often students will be processed through disenrollment because of a lack of communication. Either the Records Office cannot get in touch with a student because of an address change or, as Punches pointed out, "with all the University rules and procedures, a student may not understand what is happening."

Sometimes a hold is placed on a student's record by mistake, said Punches. "We have some disenrollments for the weirdest reasons. For example, the library may place a hold on a student's record for unreturned library books and later the books suddenly appear. We have a lot of reinstatements," he added.

The procedure for disenrollment due to holds begins with a warning letter sent to the student's instructors, asking them to notify the student of the impending disenrollment and the deadline date. Punches feels this is the most effective way to get in touch with a student. "If the hold is unresolved after the deadline, we send a second letter to the faculty telling them that the student has been disenrolled, the registrar said. The Records Office will often telephone the student before the deadline and tell them what is happening."

Punches said the student must take some responsibility. For example, "When a student checks out P.E. equipment, he signs a contract that states that a hold will be placed on his record if the equipment is not returned by its due date. You can't say these students haven't been warned," said Punches. The registrar stated that for economic reasons, these rules must be enacted. "We'd lose thousands of dollars a year without this procedure," he said.

Christmas in November

No, not 20 percent.

Thirty percent.

Yep, that's right. The 19 presidents of the California State University are getting a 30 percent raise in salary and "entertainment allowances" — a raise equal to 10 times the three percent given to the faculty this past year.

Granted, there are a hundred good reasons why the presidents and vice chancellors of the system deserve the raise. But none of them stands up in the current fiscal climate when instructors are making salary sacrifices.

"We may be in a fiscal crisis, but we'll always be in a fiscal crisis," said Trustee Don G. Livingston, who joined 11 other trustees in voting for the raise.

Sorry, Don, that just won't do it. Why can't that same reasoning apply to the instructors' salaries as well?

Additionally, the pay raise doesn't involve new funds from the legislature. The money will instead come from campus reserves — money that might have gone to other projects or programs on campus. Each campus will feel a direct fiscal impact from the raise.

No one is blaming President Warren Baker or any of the other 18 presidents. They had nothing to do with the voting, and they deserve a raise just as much as the instructors do.

But by the same token, instructors deserve a raise of equal amount. San Luis Obispo in particular is a difficult place to retain faculty because of the high cost of housing and the lack of second jobs available.

So for Cal Poly, inadequate salaries are not only unjust when compared to a president's raise, but could discourage capable faculty from teaching here.

Grenada debate drags on

Editor:

The capacity of liberals for honest rebuttal has long been in doubt. Typical of their efforts is the two-part column by associate professor William Mathews (Mustang Daily, Nov. 8 and 9).

The professor charges that "increasingly, the demonstration of force is becoming a self-justification, an end in itself rather than a means to an end. The nationalistic and patriotic loyalties of countless citizens have been tragically abused after being whipped up by government propaganda and imperialistic jingoism to cover Reagan's political flanks."

The professor goes on and on about "chauvinism and militarism," "irrationality," etc., ad nauseam. As sole evidence of all this, Prof. Mathews cites various damaging admissions said to be contained in my own letter (Mustang Daily, Oct. 31).

At the end of his second part, I am made to "want a security state dictatorship... (and) a new wave of red-baiting McCarthysim complete with neoconservative crypto-fascist chauvinism." Ho-hum.

It is rather flattering to think that the entire moral stature of the Reagan Administration could be vulnerable to any admission that I'd care to make.

However, outside two partial quotes taken out of context, not one word of those admissions is contained in or implied by my Oct. 31 letter. They were all manufactured out of whole cloth by Mathews and then attributed to me.

As to what I did say in my letter, and which has escaped any challenge whatever, all I did was to state a general principle on the moral right of the United States to use force, under which the specifics offered by the President could be subsumed.

I mentioned "America's right to use force to defend its own long-term national interest." That refers to the requirements for the long-term survival of the United States.

Thus if a situation develops which, if unopposed, would constitute a threat against us, it is our moral right to squash it, even if it involves stepping on a bug called Grenada where the Soviets were building military bases "so that the Soviets can project its military over a wider area in the Caribbean."

America also has the right to protect its own citizens when threatened. To insist that such a threat constitute a "clear and present danger" to U.S. students in Grenada translates into waiting for the bayonets to be placed at the throats of the students before taking action.

Mini-Poly Royal a bust

Editor:

We would like to express our disappointment in the Alumni Association for their extreme lack of communication with the A.P.C. and the resulting gross mishandling of the "Mini Poly Royal" on Saturday, Nov. 12 before the homecoming game.

Many clubs spent their time and money to support what they understood to be an organized fund-raising event. Had the clubs known there was to be no publicity they could have taken it upon themselves to advertise. As it was, no one showed up because no one knew about it.

Our complaint is that many clubs, including our own, needlessly spent their time and money to support an event that should have been a success.

Coalition to ban coalitions

Editor:

I can't believe the people on this campus. They protest against anything and everything, even if they know absolutely nothing about the subject. The people protesting the invasion of Grenada have no idea exactly what they are protesting, some even believe that the United States has taken over a Ford car (Grenada). Dumb, but true.

The newest fad in protesting is harassing the farmers and ranchers about the way they abuse their animals. Obviously these stick-carrying tree killers have never eaten a Big Mac. These people just don't understand that not all of us can live off granola and incense.

What really perturbs me is that these people have no practical experience or knowledge about most of the things they are protesting.

I have worked on a ranch for many years and know that cattle are treated rough. But this is a business, and you've got to expect casualties. So unless you big hearted protesters want to wipe every cow's runny nose, or kiss every chicken good night, just let us do our jobs the best way possible.

A time for us to give thanks

Thanksgiving.

That word seems to ring a bell. Isn't that the time we get an extra-long weekend away from school? I think that's also the signal to all the stores to start taking down their Christmas decorations and begin organizing the St. Patrick's Day displays.

Thanksgiving.

Okay, I'm beginning to remember now. That's the time when we were back in grade school and my little brother was making turkey decorations by drawing around his hand, while I, being much older and wiser, made them by stuffing colored feathers into pinecones.

Thanksgiving.

That's right! That's the one time of the year the entire family sits down at the dinner table at the same time and actually gets to talk to each other. That's when you get to see what everyone really looks like.

Thanksgiving.

How could I forget? That's the day mom develops "pre-holiday syndrome" and guess who gets stuck washing 4,792 dishes. But, mom pays you back by giving you all the leftovers to take back to school and you say, "Thanks mom for giving me all this great food!" That's where they got that word, "Thanksgiving."

I still seem to be missing something.

Thanksgiving.

I remember one Thanksgiving my family spent with our minister and his family. We were all excited about turkey, stuffing, yams and pie, you know, the works. However, we were quickly fooled when our host set down a few kernels of corn on each of our plates. That was it.

My brothers and I looked at each other in shock and dismay, asking, "What is the meaning of this?!"

Oh yes...

Thanksgiving.

Now the meaning comes back to me.

Hey, you're reading my work

During my years here at Cal Poly, I have, on occasion been forced to admit that, yes, I do write for the Mustang Daily. That admission is usually followed by a round of Bronx cheers or comments like "Oh yeah, so you write for the Mistake Daily."

This type of reaction made me hesitant about admitting that I am a staff writer, but as the flack got thicker and I had the opportunity to see other university newspapers, I started wearing the Mustang Daily like a badge.

Most students don't realize that the Mustang Daily is one of only two university newspapers in the nation that is run entirely by students. Written by students, printed by students, distributed by students, for students. That means no outside help. None.

Being a university newspaper, with writers, editors, typesetters and printers all still learning their crafts, mistakes are inevitable. But consider what school would be like without the Daily.

Heaven forbid students would be forced to read textbooks while waiting for a class to start. Students wouldn't know which bars have the best Happy Hour or who sells the cheapest kegs in town. And what would Cal Poly's grounds keepers have to pick up if the Mustang Daily weren't scattered around campus?

Recently, I was in the newsroom and found a copy of what one of the Central Valley universities called their school newspaper. It was pathetic to say the least.

The "newspaper" was eight pages, printed on what looked like a huge piece of toilet paper. Headlines were crooked, cutlines didn't match up with their photographs and some of the photographs were even identifiable. My high school newspaper was better than this piece of garbage.

During my tenure as a writer for the Daily, I have heard complaints from both extremes. According to many students, our stories are either sensationalized or they are almost painfully boring to read.

If the majority of people who bitch about Mustang Daily would take time to compare the Daily to other university newspapers around the country, I think they would appreciate it a little more and complain a little less.

Think about it for a minute: when a business student can't get a computer program to run, the student knows about it and his professor knows about it. If a student flunks a test, again, he knows about it and his professor knows about it, period.

But if Mustang Daily makes a mistake, the entire student body, faculty, and staff reads it.

So the next time you're sitting alone waiting for a class to start and you see a copy of the Daily thrown under a desk, pick it up and enjoy it.

Remember, how would you like 18,000 people criticizing your class work?

Author Brian Bullock is a Mustang Daily staff writer and a senior journalism major.

Reflecting on holiday origins

Editor:

As we get close to the day so casually referred to as Thanksgiving, let us reflect on the background and circumstances under which this day was set apart as a holiday by President Abraham Lincoln in his "Thanksgiving Proclamation" in 1863. Lincoln wrote:

"We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown."

"But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own.

This Thanksgiving, let's be truly grateful for all that we have and are able to do in this great and free country of ours. Our blessings are many and God deserves the credit. Remember to thank Him this weekend.

Does the set-up on the television sitcom Three's Company sound like the ideal situation to you? For many Cal Poly students, living with members of the opposite sex is preferred, not for the reasons implied on the T.V. series, but for practical reasons as well.

"No one is really shocked by it anymore," said Dori Clapp, a junior natural resources management major who is currently living in a house with two males and one other female. "It's no big deal, it's just another person you live with," she added.

Mike Reeves and Chris Whitted share Clapp's viewpoint. They put a classified ad in the Mustang Daily that said they were looking for two roommates to share their two bedroom, two bathroom apartment near campus.

The ad did not specify male or female. The two were surprised to find about twice as many females answered the ad than males. They interviewed some of the applicants and decided on the two who they thought would be the most suitable roommates—they just happened to be females.

"We weren't necessarily looking for girls. Carol and Melanie just happened to be the best people," explained Reeves, a senior business major. "If we had found guys we liked better, we would have picked them over the girls."

This is the first time Reeves and Whitted have shared housing with members of the opposite sex and they found it was easy to get to know the girls when they first moved in.

"Last year we lived with guys and it was kind of weird in the beginning. We were friends, but it took awhile to get to know each other," Whitted said. "It happened a lot faster with the girls. They are more considerate of our feelings than other guys would be," he added.

The arrangement has worked out well for everyone involved. Both guys agreed that having the girls around helps motivate them to be neater around the apartment and the girls don't have to worry about being out alone after dark. The roommates look out for each other.

Another male student, who did not wish to be identified, because his parents are unaware of his living arrangement, agreed that co-ed roommates have certain advantages—but that it really "depends on the people involved."

"You have to be able to agree on everything. If one person is unhappy it screws everything up," he added. "It's a misconception that girls will clean up after you, you have to clean up after yourself. Sometimes the girls are just as messy as the guys."

Although the practice is taken for granted among most students, male/female-shared housing is still prohibited in the campus residence halls and in off-campus student housing, such as Tropicana and Mustang Village.

"If you want to co-habitate, you had better do it off campus," warned Robert Bostrum, director of housing at Cal Poly.

"There are some people that say everybody is doing it, but that seems to be an immature response. We are very upfront about the fact that we offer only single-sex housing on campus," he explained.

Bostrum is concerned about maintaining a wholesome image on campus. "It makes a difference to employers if you have gone to a party school or not...think about it. When Poly is delegated money by the legislature for new building or special purposes it isn't accidental that we receive it when other campuses do not. We are doing some of the things the legislature values," he stated.

Staff representatives of Tropicana and Mustang Village both agreed that their tenants prefer single-sex housing. "No students really question our housing policy," explained Betty Patti, receptionist at Tropicana Village. "Very few even bring it up."

Another student who said she enjoyed the benefits of mixed housing, Cathy Donaldson, a senior journalism major,

At home in the kitchen, these Cal Poly roommates (l-r) Melanie Erickson and Donaldson, who currently lives in North Mountain residence halls on campus, shared a five-bedroom house with four males earlier in her college career. "There were no guy/girl distinction. We were just people living together."

Schaller appointed to CSU Academic Planning and Program Review Committee

The executive assistant to the ASI President, Scott Schaller, has been appointed to the Chancellor's Advisory Academic Planning and Program Review Committee for the California State University system.

Schaller and a student from Cal State Los Angeles will be responsible for dealing with short and long-range budget problems and their effect on campuses, and campus programs, including curriculum.

Last summer Schaller applied to Ed Van Ginkel, President of the California State Students Association, who recommended him to the state chancellor.

Schaller, a senior political science major, said "I wanted to expand my knowledge of politics and get some practical experience." His qualification and a "determination to get involved in university politics," were probably being appointed, he said.

"We ask CSSA representatives from each school in the system to form an executive committee from 15 statewide Academic Planning Committee members," said Van Ginkel.

"In consultation with the state chancellor, we nominated Scott to the Chancellor's Advisory Academic Planning and Program Review Committee."

she explained. "It's no better or worse than living with members of your own sex. As long as you respect each other, it works out fine."

"I learned a lot about how guys think and what they're thinking. There were good opportunities for developing friendships," she added. "You begin to understand how society puts pressures on both sexes. I learned about the other person as well as the other sex."

Donaldson feels that, ultimately, this learning experience will help her later in life and in her career. "I'd definitely do it again," she said.

Despite the fact the country, as a whole, is leaning toward conservatism; the trend of male/female-shared housing is on an uprise.

UC professor says land development must change

by Andy Frojker
Staff Writer

Development programs must work together with the environment in a way that is profitable to both, a professor of environmental studies told an audience of 70 in Chumash Auditorium Friday.

Dr. Raymond Dasmann of UC Santa Cruz spoke on "An Ecological Approach to Sustainable Development" as the first meeting of the year of Sigma Xi, the scientific research society.

Dasmann criticized the international development programs of the 1950's, and 1960's, which were aimed at helping the underdeveloped areas of the world raise their living standards.

"These large-scale developments have not done much to bridge the gap between the rich and the poor," Dasmann said.

Outlining a system of ecodevelopment, Dasmann said that development was not only for poor countries but for rich countries, which should redevelop to reduce overconsumption and waste.

The development of the China under the leadership of Mao was a good example of the way development should be handled, Dasmann said. Mao concentrated on working at the village-level and providing for its basic needs. In contrast, Lenin put Russia's development effort into industrialization while letting people starve.

A second important objective of development programs must be to increase self-reliance on the part of the participants. This means providing education and making sure the local people are in control of the means of production.

"We must decentralize development," Dasmann said. "We must increase the ability of people to take care of themselves."

The third goal of development should be based on ecological sustainability and the idea that development must be in symbiosis with the environment.

"The conservation community hasn't given much thought to development in the past," Dasmann said. "And developers have concentrated on short-term gains and quick pay-offs instead of long-term sustainability."

As a result, there is a need to build ecological knowledge into the development process. This has worked in theory, Dasmann said, but not very well in actual practice.

"We're winning the war in terms of books, papers and conferences, but the struggle on the ground isn't so great," Dasmann said.

Before teaching at UC Santa Cruz, Dasmann was the director of international programs for the Conservation Foundation and a senior ecologist at the International Union for Conservation of Nature in Switzerland.

Dean of students questions chalk policy

by Caroline Paras
Staff Writer

Cal Poly's dean of students is a little surprised that student organizations are being billed for scribbling messages in chalk.

ASI President Jeff Sanders told members of the Student Senate Wednesday night that Dean of Students Russell Brown wrote a memorandum expressing his concern that the Cal Poly administration is charging student organizations for clean-up work resulting from chalk graffiti.

The memorandum was addressed to Executive Dean Doug Gerald.

Brown's memorandum to Gerald came after the senate learned last week student organizations and clubs would be billed.

Brown serves as presidential representative to the senate.

Plant Operations Director Ed Naretto said last week those clubs and organizations involved in scrawling messages in chalk will be charged by the amount of labor time expended to clean the graffiti. That hourly wage is about $9, he said.

Brown's memo stated "to my knowledge there was no consultation regarding the matter. The decision may be appropriate, however there should have been consultation with student affairs staff who work with student organizations and student representatives from ASI."

Brown wrote that consulting those organizations affected before making a final decision on issues has always been an "operating procedure" in the past.

"I am disappointed we did not follow it in this case and trust we will (follow past procedures) in the future," he wrote.

Wrestlers raise curtain on season at Poly tourney

by Scott Swanson
Managing Editor

The Cal Poly wrestling squad unveiled its act to the outside world Saturday at the first Cal Poly Collegiate Open Tournament held at Cuesta College.

Although there was no team scoring in the event, the Mustangs finished with one individual winner—Danny Romero at 167 pounds. Romero beat Gordon Washington of the University of Nevada—Las Vegas 5-1 to win the championship.

Cal State Bakersfield finished with five champions, San Jose State with three.

The Mustangs also had five second-place finishers. Mike Provenzano lost to Bakersfield's Pablo Saenz 12-2 in the 118-pound final. Chris DeLong dropped the 134-pound championship to Bakersfield's Brian Stevens, 12-5. At 177 pounds, Roger Sayles lost 8-6 to San Jose's Marvin Jones while John Noland lost 7-2 to Andy Tsarnas in the 190-pound final. In the Heavyweight division, Kahlán O'Hara of UNLV gained the title with a 6-1 decision over Cal Poly's Jeff Steward.

Other placewinners for the Mustangs were Tommy McSherry in third place at 142 pounds, Jordan Cummings was third at 150-pounds, John Holbrook and Dennis Townsend were fourth at 158-pounds. Heavyweight Mark Tracey was fifth at 150-pounds, and Jeff Chedester and Tim Castaneda were sixth at heavyweight and 126-pounds respectively.

The only big misfortune of the day for Poly was a shoulder separation suffered by Chedester. He is expected to be out of action for two months.

126-pound champion John Loomis of Bakersfield was named the outstanding wrestler of the tournament.

Poly coach Vaughan Hitchcock felt the Mustangs wrestled well but "not up to our full potential." "Our performance was adequate but not outstanding," Hitchcock said. "We are young and inexperienced overall."

"The condition of some of our wrestlers (Townsend and Sayles) could be better because they missed last year due to injury or redshirting. It is very typical to be flat after laying off a year."

"If we continue to compete, we will do better," he predicted.

Poly will travel to Fresno State on Wednesday, Nov. 23, for its first dual meet of the season. Match time is 7:30 p.m.

Winning isn't everything—or enough for Poly women

The Cal Poly women's soccer club battled UCLA for southern California championship this weekend. They beat the Bruins but lost the title.

by Dave Wilcox
Sports Editor

Add another line to the old adage "It's not whether you win or lose, it's how you play the game." How many goals you score is also a big deal.

At least it was this weekend for the Cal Poly women's soccer team at the Southern California Women's Soccer Club Championships on UCLA's home field.

After splitting their first two games Saturday in the round-robin tournament, the Mustangs squared off against undefeated UCLA for the championship Sunday. Winning, though, wouldn't be good enough. A flawless effort wouldn't give them the title, either. Poly needed to outscore the Bruins by two goals.

But while Mustang goalies Liz Pawek and Nina Luzietti managed to keep the Bruins scoreless, the only offense Poly was able to muster was a Sue Landis goal off Kristin Sandberg's assist. The goal, coming in the last five minutes, gave the Mustangs their first win over the Bruins in three tries this season, but left them with only 14 overall points in the tourney, one back of the champion Bruins.

Each win in the tourney earns the victor seven points, while losses get you nothing. But if two squads wind up with identical records, as the Mustangs and Bruins did, each finishing at 2-1, the title is awarded to the team scoring the most goals during the tourney.

So, the most important goal the Bruins scored against Poly was given up by Cal State Northridge's goalie. The Matadors, who fell to the Mustangs 1-0 in the opening game of the tourney, were beaten by the Bruins 2-0 later that day. There's your crown.

The Mustangs dropped a 1-0 decision to Fresno later on Saturday, the Bulldogs' only score coming on a direct free kick outside the penalty box.

Versus the Matadors, sophomore halfback Suzie Johansson pushed across the only goal on an unassisted shot in the first half.

The Mustangs, who finished their season with a 13-3-2 overall mark, may face their toughest battle during the upcoming off-season as they try to gain NCAA varsity status—denied to them this year.

With virtually every northern California team already a member of the NCAA and many Southern California clubs joining next season, the already-depleted league the Mustangs participate in will probably become extinct, according to team members.
